

THE ROADS THAT NEVER WERE

Some time ago I published figures that showed that although motorists paid £2, 600 million pounds in 10 years to the Exchequer, only a bare £60 million's were spent on the roads. We are well aware that we are allowed on the roads only on sufferance, and now we are openly told by Mr. Watkinson, the Minister of Transport, who was recently reported in 'The Daily Telegraph' as saying " I do not build roads for private motorists. That is not my job" Road-building for pleasure motoring might come one day, he continues, 'but not out of the money I have to spend' We are all grossly overtaxed but the motorist must pay his share. The motorist will get no sympathy from me"

It looks as if Mr. Watkinson, has joined with Nasser to make things as awkward as he can for we motorists. My licence book still refers to 'ROAD FUND TAX' but apparently Mr. Watkinson could not care less. Any comments ???
